

Instructor Natalie Garmson with Urvi Sanghavi and baby Shay and Lea Cockram and Lani.

www.communitypbx.com.au d300673

Massage magic

INFANT massage may not be the most widely known industry, but it has provided Currambine resident Natalie Garmson with a fulfilling career, something she found lacking in other fields.

After working for five years as a lab technician Natalie, while on maternity leave with her second child, saw an advertisement for the Infant Massage Information Service and signed up for a course.

Soon after completing the course, Natalie decided to pursue infant massage as a career, opening Idibidi Kids Massage in Perth.

"When your job involves your passion and fulfils your goals it makes work so easy - I love everything about my job," she said.

"Learning how to massage your baby from an instructor is very important as it teaches you the right amount of pressure to apply, and also ensures that your stroke and massage technique is correct."